Ribbon Sticker Inside

“To the men and women of the United States armed forces now in the Middle East, the peace of a troubled world and the hopes of an oppressed people now depend on you. That trust is well placed. The enemies you confront will come to know your skill and bravery. The people you liberate will witness the honorable and decent spirit of the American military.”

President George W. Bush

Message from the editor

This month's special issue of Soldiers marks the end of the second year of the global war on terror. Despite predictions of gloom and doom by the media and a few retired senior officers, our soldiers triumphed in Iraq, as they did in Afghanistan.

In recognition of their efforts, we've tried to capture many of the key events from the past 12 months and arrange them in a timeline format. While the timeline is by no means all-inclusive, it does chronicle the tireless and heroic efforts of the men and women of America's Army within a historical framework.

We hope you find this month's issue of Soldiers interesting and informative.

"You are the men and women who are fighting this new war. Your gallantry and courage in the face of evil has stirred the souls of all Americans. Day after day, week after week, they have seen your faces and read your stories. They have shared your sorrows and celebrated your victories. And in each one of you they see reflected their deeply felt honor, pride and patriotism."

Secretary of Defense
Donald Rumsfeld

The War on Ter

BY September 2002 American and coalition forces had forced al Qaeda and the Taliban out of Afghanistan and had begun assisting the Afghan people in rebuilding the country's infrastructure, creating a new government and training an Afghan national army.

Even as U.S. and coalition forces continued to eliminate the remnants of the Taliban and the al Qaeda terror network, changes were being made in America to boost homeland defense. The number of federal marshals traveling aboard commercial airliners grew. Security was beefed up at power plants, ports and border crossings. And tens of thousands of National Guard and Reserve troops from the joint services were on active duty.

President George W. Bush ordered small-pox vaccinations to begin for military personnel and some of America's first-responders. He also called for a stockpile of small-pox vaccine as a defense against the threat of terrorists unleashing the virus in densely populated areas of the country.

Bush established the Department of Homeland Security, which boasts some 170,000 people and includes all or parts of 22 federal agencies, including the Customs Service, Coast Guard and Federal Emergency Management Agency.

Additionally, reorganization of America's Unified Command Plan for homeland defense resulted in establishment of U.S. Northern Command and realignment of U.S. Joint Forces Command and U.S. Strategic Command.

The changes will allow USJFC to better focus on its mission as joint-forces provider and contributor of new ideas related to Army transformation, said Peter Varga, the special assistant to the secretary of defense for homeland security. The changes will also allow USSTRATCOM to focus on its mission to provide early warning of a missile attack.

In October a terrorist attack in Bali claimed the lives of dozens of tourists. In the past year terrorists also struck in Pakistan, Russia and Saudi Arabia, reminding nations around the world that "opposing and fighting terrorism, wherever it exists, is imperative," said Secretary of State Colin Powell.

Reminders of the terrorist attacks that first rocked the nation on Sept. 11, 2001, were ever present. At the site where United Airlines Flight 77 crashed into the Pentagon, clergymen from all the military services dedicated a chapel to those killed in the attack. The Pentagon's fourth corridor, which was partially destroyed in the attack and was rebuilt, was also dedicated to those who died. And military officials selected the design for an outdoor memorial that will be built near the site of the attack.

As 2002 was drawing to an end, Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld and other senior U.S. officials reported that Iraq had ties to al Qaeda and was continuing to develop weapons of mass destruction.

Suddenly the war on terrorism focused not on Afghanistan but on Iraq and president Saddam Hussein's brutal, long-standing regime.

Iraq became the daily topic of conversation as politicians and military leaders in the United States and abroad debated the potential long-term benefits and repercussions of a U.S.-led invasion to eliminate the threat of these weapons.

For months Saddam ignored America's demands to produce evidence that his chemical and biological weapons programs had been eliminated as promised more than a decade earlier, after the first Gulf war.

As months-long diplomatic efforts to avert war continued, Saddam finally allowed United Nations weapons inspectors to enter the country in December 2002 — for the first time since 1998.

The inspectors scoured as much of Iraq as possible over prescribed periods, even searching underground bunkers and tunnels throughout the country, including under Saddam's lavish, highly guarded palaces.

While Saddam appeared to be cooperating to implement U.N. Security Council resolutions, his actions indicated he couldn't be trusted; his aircraft were firing at U.S. and coalition aircraft in the northern and southern no-fly-zones

Story by Heike Hasenauer

— nearly 70 times over a two-week period, Rumsfeld reported.

Bush said of Saddam's painstakingly slow efforts to adhere to the U.N. resolutions: "He either gets rid of his weapons ... or the United States will lead a coalition to disarm this man We must make sure this madman never has the capacity to hurt us with a nuclear weapon or to use the stockpile of [biological or chemical weapons] he possesses."

On March 19 Bush authorized the first preemptive strike against Iraq, a "decapitation attack" against top Iraqi leaders, after Saddam failed to respond to Bush's ultimatum — "48 hours to leave Iraq or face the consequences."

American ships in the Red Sea and Persian Gulf fired cruise missiles, and F-117 fighters dropped 2,000-lb. bombs on a Baghdad compound where Saddam and his sons were believed to be hiding.

During the next few days the U.S. 7th Cavalry Regiment led the advance move north from Kuwait across the Iraqi desert.

On March 20 additional coalition ground units crossed into Iraq. And over the next few weeks the 3rd Infantry Division, along with soldiers of the 101st and 82nd Airborne divisions, pushed north toward Baghdad, seizing Saddam's presidential palaces. At the same time, U.S. Marines fought their way into southeastern Baghdad and seized Rasheed military air base, while British troops took Iraq's second largest city, Basra.

By the end of April U.S. paratroopers of the 173rd Abn. Brigade had jumped onto Bashur airfield and were reinforced by soldiers of the 1st Inf. Div. Follow-on forces included the 1st Armored Div., 4th Inf. Div. and elements of the 2nd Armd. Cav. Regt.

For America, what became known as "the second Gulf war" had been the most visible war in U.S. military history. Through daily on-site reports from journalists embedded with the front-line units, viewers experienced some of the fear, danger and tragedy of combat, albeit from the safety of their own living rooms.

They also shared in the joy of victory, witnessing as they happened, such events as the toppling of a giant statue of Saddam Hussein from a public square in Baghdad, and the smiles and cheers of Iraqi citizens who welcomed the coalition forces.

By the time of Bush's May announcement that major combat operations were over, the world had witnessed the many facets of war, from the capture of U.S.

soldiers, whose anguished faces had been shown on Iraqi TV, to the heroic rescue by joint special forces troops of PFC Jessica Lynch from an enemy hospital in Nasiriyah.

As the story about Lynch's rescue and details about the injuries she'd sustained flooded the media, so did the stories of U.S. and coalition troops who'd been killed.

The special forces personnel who helped rescue Lynch also searched for other 507th Maintenance Company soldiers who had been taken prisoner. They uncovered 11 shallow graves, nine of which contained the remains of 507th soldiers, among them a female soldier who had been Lynch's friend.

Days later, marines rescued seven Army POWs in an area southeast of Tikrit. Five of those were also from the 507th.

Across America, yellow ribbons tied around trees in countless neighborhoods spoke volumes about Americans' support of their troops — in Iraq, Afghanistan, and wherever terror groups operate.

Two years after the Sept. 11 attacks, America and its coalition partners have toppled the brutal regimes of the Taliban and Saddam Hussein.

Terrorists still plague many areas of the world, but Iraq and Afghanistan are emerging from the blight. And for untold thousands of their citizens, wonderful possibilities lay ahead.

The Campaign Continues...

- Approximately 172,000 active-duty, National Guard and Army Reserve soldiers are currently deployed in some 70 countries worldwide in direct support of the war on terror.
- Federal officials continue to search for clues to determine who instigated the October 2001 anthrax-by-mail attacks that killed five people and sickened 17 others.
- The Department of Defense has begun the transfer of detainees being held at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba. Taken prisoner during U.S. attacks on Taliban and al Qaeda forces in Afghanistan, the detainees are being returned to their countries of origin, as intelligence indicates they do not pose a threat to the U.S.
- A new DOD force and installation security project intended to deter terrorist threats is scheduled to debut Oct. 1. The project is known as "Guardian" and will integrate new capabilities with current force-protection measures.
- Coalition forces are making great strides in improving the quality of life for the Iraqi people. Along with what is in-country, 2.2 million metric tons of food are expected to arrive by October 2003. The Iraqi Ministry of Health has approved a budget that will fund supplies, equipment and basic health-care services. Future electrical, water and sewer improvements are budgeted through the end of the year.
- U.S. and coalition forces continue to help the people of Afghanistan rebuild their nation.
- The search continues for al Qaeda leader Osama bin Laden and members of former Iraqi dictator Saddam Hussein's inner circle.

"The dangers to our country and the world will be overcome. We will pass through this time of peril and carry on the work of peace. We will defend our freedom. We will bring freedom to others and we will prevail."
